Mt. Ellinor	11/4/2016	Hiking	No goats for a change.
Little Quilcene Trail #835	11/12/2016	Hiking	The Little Quilcene trail was in good condition, along with the rest of trail #839 to the summit of Mt Townsend. There was only one very minor blowdown (easy to step over) about 1.3 miles up the trail. The road up to the trail head from Bon Jon Pass however is looking a little rough after all of the recent rains; there are some pretty deep ruts in the middle of the road so care must be taken when driving over them, some potholes as well but all passable as long as you slowdown.
Murhut Falls	11/14/2016	Hiking	Great trail in excellent condition and the falls were spectacular. the gravel portion of Forest Service Road 2510 is full of pot holes and rough.
Wynoochee Lake Shore Trail #878	11/13/2016	Hiking	The trail, while in reasonably good condition, has a substantial amount of blowdown across it throughout the entire loop (6" diameter up to 2.5'). This makes it impassible to stock, and can slow down travel significantly. Given the endless rain on the day I hiked, much of the trail was puddles, and all of the minor creek crossings were running quite high (difficult to cross without getting wet). Some blowdown obscured the trail enough so that it was difficult to follow, especially in the dark. Maidenhair Falls was beautiful, and running vigorously. Overall a pleasant, if potentially very wet, fall-winter hike.
Dry Creek Trail	11/25/2016	Hiking	The trail is in good shape! Lots of rain yesterday so trail was wet and hiking boots were a must. Hiked to the snow line around 2200 feet. Turned around because we ran out of time, not because of snow accumulation. Nice waterfalls, good views of Lake Cushman and Dry Creek certainly wasn't, it was raging. And we had the entire trail to ourselves.
Elbo Creek #892.1	11/27/2016	Hiking	Hiked up from Elbo Creek to the FSR (Jackson Creek Rd?), then up to Buck Mtn via the roads. The trail is a great condition. There appears to have been some recent trail work (no blowdowns). Overall very well graded. Snow did not start until about 0.5 miles up the FS Road that the end of the trail reaches. The snow was ~16" deep at the summit of Buck Mtn (~3700').
